Plan Description and Explanatory Notes

Timing: Why 2023 and not 2022?

Experience indicates that systemic change requires methodical planning and execution. There are numerous interrelationships and dependencies in the tasking for the bell time change initiative, and many impacts for the HCPSS that extend beyond the specifics of the implementation workstreams. Taken together, these point to the logic behind the recommended implementation timeline. Three brief examples serve to illustrate these points:

- An “opt-in” transportation policy is one of the assumptions leading to a no-cost solution. This requires a set of tasks including changing Policy 5200; determining and implementing the technology and process changes required; and using enhanced data from these changes to plan routing efficiencies. Each of these elements requires months to execute properly, and most of the tasking must be completed sequentially.
- Bell time changes will affect every school in the system. The implications of the changes on the community will be broad and deep. Even on an accelerated schedule, school-by-school bell times cannot be determined earlier than late Spring, 2022 which would leave a very compressed timeframe for community outreach, and for families to plan and adapt prior to school startup in 2022.
- Determining how the transportation system will remain resilient to future uncertainties is a crucial implementation success factor. Bus driver shortages preceded the pandemic and are likely to linger well beyond. The no-cost solution also assumes there will be no continuation of the driver shortage. The way the system has adapted to the shortage in 2021/22 will not be available to it once the bell time changes have been implemented.

These and many other examples influenced the recommendation for implementation of the bell time changes to coincide with the start of school in 2023.

Implementation Workstreams

There are eight complementary and related workstreams comprising the implementation plan. Workstreams 1-5 relate to the process of adjusting times and bus routes together with associated reporting and outreach requirements. Workstreams 6-8 relate to the changes required to the Transportation Office that will support the initiative and ensure successful implementation and operations in 2023/24 and beyond. Each workstream is summarized here:

1. Policy 5200 revisions – A foundational element to the no-cost solution is revision to the transportation planning parameters contained within Policy 5200. These must be drafted and approved before the bell time changes and associated bus routes can be finalized.
2. School-by-School Bell Time Determination – The no-cost solution was built on a structured analysis and illustrative examples. With the approved policy revisions and this feasibility analysis as the starting point, school-by-school bell time changes for the entire system must be determined. This will serve as the basis for bus routing, and so that specific school bell time changes can be communicated to the community early in the process.
3. Establish Revised Bus Routes – The actual planning of new bus routes cannot begin until the policy revisions are approved, and school bell times have been determined. Final routing cannot be completed until boundaries have been realigned to incorporate High School 13.
4. Community Outreach – Recognizing the magnitude of the changes involved, and that every school in the system is likely to be affected, a robust and extensive program of outreach is required. This should be an inclusive process to garner and incorporate feedback, and of sufficient scope to ensure the community has time to adapt to the changes before they are implemented.
5. School Board Progress Updates – This will be a living plan with expectations for revisions and enhancements as it proceeds. A regular program to update the School Board is critical. This will be to inform, but also to seek guidance as circumstances change and clarity is gained regarding current unknowns.
6. Transportation Service Model changes – The current distribution of transportation contracts to bus companies will require changes to support the bell time initiative. Additionally, some current contractors have struggled to adapt to pandemic-induced driver shortages. Ensuring continuity and resiliency in service delivery requires a reassessment of, and associated changes to, how transportation services are structured.
7. Technology and associated process changes – Within the revised policy-based planning parameters are elements that will require that new technologies and associated processes be implemented within the Office of Transportation.
8. Organization changes – The revised bell time structure, planning parameters, and technology upgrades may require a reorganization of the Office of Transportation to ensure successful operations. These must be determined and implemented.

Structure of the Plan

The implementation plan itself is appended to this summary. It is constructed in a project management tool to enable active day-by-day tracking, management, and updates. The version presented here is the baseline plan as exported from that tool. Staff expects that each task will be expanded with relevant subtasks and assignments as the plan proceeds, and that additional tasking will be added as needed and in response to decisions as they are reached. Each update to the School Board will include an updated version of the plan, with progress noted on each task.

The plan is presented below first as a series of images from the Gantt charting available in the planning tool. These should be sufficient to provide a summary view of the overall implementation plan. An expanded tabular view of each individual task is, however, also included following the images. Staff will seek guidance from the School Board as to the level of detail and type of presentation desired for future updates.
